yesterday at English's for the third time in this city. With three exceptions the Mrs. J. A. Ferguson, of 510 North Capitol | cast of characters was the same as that

Phil Riley, the clever comedian, who was seen here earlier this season as the leading funmaker in "Florodora," appeared in Richard Carle's old part, Pettibone, and gave such an excellent copy of Carle's interpretation that his performance was in every way satisfactory.

Helene Frederick, a sweet-voiced soprano, sang the leading feminine role in excellent style, although she did not act it as well as did her predecessor. Mamie Ryan took the part of Sallie, the maid, and, while her voice was not equal to the lemands made upon it, she played the part in a clever manner. The other leading parts were all in the hands of the same people who had appeared in Indianapolis during the former engagements of the company. Henry Norman as the honest gambler, Edmund Stanley in the leading tenor part, Charles Wayne as the acrobatic sergeant, William Rock as a delightful reception at the Herron Art | the comical Chinaman, Anges Paul as the Institute yesterday afternoon, entertaining affable authoress and Ethel Johnson as Patsy, the ackward servant girl, all duplicated the hits which they scored early in as the company is preparing to go to Chicago in the near future for a summer's The audiences yesterday afternoon and evening were large and enthusiastic and the theatrical season at English's was brought to a fitting conclusion.
